1. During July 1948 Barbu Niculescu, nephew and secretary of General Nicolae Radescu, informed a Rumanian friend in France that the United States Department of State had requested General Radescu to form a Rumanian committee. According to Niculescu, he was informed by the State Department that Radescu's proposal that nine representatives of the political parties and six non-party personalities constitute the committee was satisfactory and proved that Radescu did not desire to secure a majority of his adherents for such a committee.
2. Niculescu declared that upon receipt of this "appeal" from the Department of State, Radescu had informed it and King Mihai that he would proceed to organize a Rumanian committee. If persons whom he requested to join him in such a committee did not reply, vacancies would be left for them. General Radescu, Niculescu stated, could not ignore the request of the Department of State, which now approved his point of view.
